

Ceremony seat

Jirah

EDITION
Delvis (Un)Limited

Ceremony Seat is a bespoke natural walnut chair. The corset is a fashion reference, personifying the object. The form of the chair references handmade church pews, from old, Middle-American church houses with a utilitarian, minimal design influenced by the artist's upbringing in small town midwest U.S., and interest in spiritual architecture and pursuit of sacred spaces.

Dark Times Bright Signs

"Times have been dark" more than once in history, and "the world has been falling apart" for centuries, countless times, generation after generation. Today, though, dystopia feels particularly realistic—certified, experienced electronically in real-time, and reinforced by scientific theories now accessible to all. Apocalyptic thinking not only surrounds us—it has become mainstream. Driven by this condition of hyperawareness, swept by waves of eco-anxiety, saturated by conflict and forced to face a rapidly-evolving reality—a new generation is developing new languages, perhaps forms of reworking, toward new balances, of hope. At the same time, though, the apocalyptic scenarios around us—or rather, upon us—cannot help but permeate our gaze, consciously or otherwise, shaping the creative language of today and the way we parse the world.

BIO DESIGNER:

Jirah is a New York and London-based design collective that operates at the intersection of interior architecture and conceptual art. Bringing together designers, architects, and artisans, he produces immersive environments that are both deeply personal and culturally attuned—spaces that become the setting for meaningful living and interaction. At its core, Room-file exists to support the in-between. For creatives navigating the space between corporate structure and freelance uncertainty, he provides a safety net and a sense of belonging—fostering a community that values excellence, experimentation, and long-term creative growth.
